A striking festure of social life at the Capital during this season is the crowds of beautiful and handsomely-dressed ladies that throng Pennsylyania avenue every pleasant afternoon. I heard a fashionable New Yorker say yesterday that he met more pretty women in an hours's stroll than would cross his pathway at his native city in two days.

A Mother Who Teaches Lying.

Ever since the first young woman I ever loved swore to me she loved me only and ran off with another fellow I have believed that the female sex does not really understand the truth. A young lady last night very candidly informed me that she considered a lie a very useful and artistle feature of life, and that the truth was as devoid of beauty as a straight line, and yet she expects me to believe everything she ness. I know a young boy who is being simply ruined in his education by his ence which generally characterizes a boy's nature. This tender parent has instructed fare reduces his age under five. He has been educated to give that figure when asked by anybody who wants to collect rioney for his transportation. Last week a friend of the family was displaying his interest in the child by inquiring his age. The little hoy hesitated for a moment and then looked up at his mother: "Memma, is he a conductor?"
"No, child."
"Then I am eight years old."
